Admit it or not, software is deployed by developers and used by communities for certain purposes. And when hackers at cross purposes exploit the software to take things from those communities, some of the victims will appeal to the government for help. And sometimes those governments will respond by sending men with guns to restrain the hackers and imprison them.

Cross-border payment is one of the important application scenarios of blockchain technology. The traditional cross-border payment process is complex, involving multiple intermediaries, with long settlement time and high fees. In contrast, cross-border payments based on blockchain technology can realize direct peer-to-peer transactions, greatly simplifying the process, shortening settlement time, and reducing costs. Currently, several countries and financial institutions have begun to try using blockchain technology for cross-border payments. With the continuous maturity of technology and the improvement of regulatory frameworks, blockchain cross-border payments are expected to become the mainstream cross-border payment method in the future.

Investors piled back into Bitcoin ETFs and their Ethereum counterparts Tuesday, reversing days of outflows, although the fresh investments failed to give the two largest cryptocurrencies by market value a long-lasting bump.
