Lately, however, that decision has moved from tactical to strategic. Beyond developers deciding between ecosystems, big companies are now building their blockchains from scratch. And when the companies doing it are Stripe, Coinbase or other giants with deep regulatory and distribution advantages, the L1 stops being a neutral playing field and starts looking like a moat.

The “flippening,” the idea that Ethereum will one day surpass Bitcoin’s market capitalization, has been a topic of debate for years but has gained renewed attention in recent months.

The technique, called “EtherHiding,” emerged in 2023 and is typically used in conjunction with social engineering techniques, such as reaching out to victims with fake employment offers and high-profile interviews, directing users to malicious websites or links, according to Google.

DeepSearch helps you go from a noisy tweet storm to a consolidated set of primary documents: white papers, token contracts and press releases.

When you’ve been around markets long enough, you start to see patterns. The tools we trade on and the rails we build on are never static. In crypto, one of the biggest shifts happening right now is at the base layer.

Derivatives often flag trouble early. When funding rates swing sharply positive (longs paying shorts) and open interest (OI) builds near resistance, positioning becomes crowded: the perfect setup for a squeeze in the opposite direction.
