Paraphrasing a sentence means rewording someone else's ideas into your own language. This is typically done to simplify complex ideas for easier understanding, without altering the core message. Rephrasing focuses on changing the structure or choice of words in a sentence to enhance clarity or impact, while keeping the original message the same. Rewriting a sentence involves using synonyms, adjusting the tone, or introducing new insights. The scope of rewriting can range from minor adjustments to a comprehensive transformation, depending on whether the goal is to refine for clarity, adjust the style, or present the content to a different audience. Each technique is useful for editing sentences, whether you aim to clarify the message or adapt the content for a new context. Just remember to always to cite the original source wherever you use a rework text to avoid plagiarism.For a quick and easy sentence rewording, use a free online tool, like the one at the top of this page. To use this tool, paste in your source text, choose how you'd like your text to sound, then click the "Reword it" button. If you prefer to manually reword a sentence, start by thoroughly reading the original sentence. Next, express the same ideas in your own words. This might involve using different synonyms, altering the sentence structure, mixing up the word order, omitting details, or adding your own interpretation. Employing a combination of these strategies will help ensure your version is original and avoids plagiarism. Remember, when using reworded material in your work, it's essential to cite the original source. This includes adding an in-text citation within your document and a corresponding full reference in your bibliography.If properly disclosed and cited, using a sentence rewriting tool should not be considered cheating. It's a helpful way to speed up your work or get inspiration for writing in your own voice, tone, and style. That said, students should keep in mind that teachers may have different policies about rewriting tools. If you're rewriting for school, check your professor's policies and credit your source so you don't unintentionally plagiarize. Rewriting a sentence involves taking an existing sentence and changing its wording or structure to convey the same idea in a new way, using your own words. Plagiarizing, on the other hand, is when you take someone else's sentence or idea and use it as if it were your own without giving them credit. It's essentially claiming someone else's work without permission or acknowledgment. To ensure you're on the right side of academic and professional standards, you can use Grammarly's citation tool. This tool helps you correctly cite sources, making it clear where your information comes from. Additionally, you can use Grammarly's plagiarism checker to confirm your work is original.
