Key Takeaways: Self-esteem is how we value and perceive ourselves. It is normal for teens to experience feelings of low self-esteem and lack of confidence. Self-esteem worksheets and activities can help increase confidence in one's abilities. It is normal to lack confidence at times, especially during one's teen years. However, having low self-esteem can be especially challenging. Teens with lower self-esteem may view themselves very differently compared to how other people actually see them. It can make things like starting school, working on tasks, and forming new friendships difficult. Self-esteem worksheets for teens are tools that can help improve confidence and a teen's regard for themselves. Here are 20 of the best self-esteem worksheets and activities that your teen can use. 20 Best Self-Esteem Worksheets and Activities for Teen Self-esteem worksheets for adolescents can provide a guide on how to build confidence, pride, and morale in teens. 1. Self-Esteem Daily Check-In A teen's self-esteem can be affected by many things, including the environment, how safe they feel, and their self-concept. Parents, teachers, social workers, and mental health professionals can help teens develop their self-esteem by doing check-ins that help them recognize good things that happen on any given day. This worksheet provides a list of prompts and questions that will help your teen identify simple accomplishments or positive things that they see and experience. 2. Forgiving Myself Part of building one's self-esteem is the act of self-forgiveness, which involves letting go of negative emotions tied to mistakes or errors committed in the past. Forgiveness may come easily when it's for others, but it can be difficult for the self. This self-forgiveness worksheet is helpful for teens in practicing self-compassion and developing a better relationship with themselves and those around them. This emotional healing can significantly and positively impact one's self-esteem. 3. My Strengths Teens have unique strengths, whether that's honesty, loyalty, or perseverance. By identifying the strengths that they have, teens can grow the confidence needed to go after their dreams and achieve the things they put their minds to. To build self-esteem, it helps to identify one's top strengths as well as other strengths to develop. If your teen has trouble identifying their strengths, ask them what activities they enjoy and what makes them happy. 4. Daily Affirmations Our self-esteem can be influenced by the environment, such as when challenging situations happen and affect us. When life gets difficult, teens can still remain positive by using daily affirmations. Examples of these statements include "I don't need to be perfect" and "Challenges make me stronger." Using this handout can keep negative thoughts at bay and help maintain our self-esteem. 5. Ways to Improve Self-Esteem Self-esteem can affect every aspect of a teen's life, including their physical health, emotional well-being, and relationships. Individuals with high self-esteem believe in their capabilities while recognizing and mitigating their weaknesses. In this worksheet, teens can learn how to take small steps to improve their self-esteem. 6. Daily Self-Esteem Journal Reflecting on positive behaviors, lessons learned, and personal goals is a great way to build self-esteem. Teens can do just that by using this self-esteem journal. They can rate their self-esteem on a scale of 1 to 10 and answer questions such as, "The best part of today was…" and "Positive feelings I experienced today were…" Journaling this way will allow teens to think of things that will make them feel good about themselves. 7. Positive Affirmations Positive affirmations are declarations that allow teens to feel good no matter the situation. These statements can help build self-esteem by reassuring teens that they are talented, creative, and competent. It helps teens learn how to appreciate small things, which boosts their happiness and health. This worksheet will encourage your child to come up with positive affirmations from A to Z. They can place this on the wall by their desk or anywhere they can see it daily. 8. Self-Esteem Coping Statements Challenging negative thinking and feeling good about yourself is an important part of building self-esteem. By using self-esteem coping statements such as "I am stronger than I think," teens can battle anxiety or fear. This worksheet is great for those with lower self-esteem or teens who tend to be self-critical. 9. Self-Esteem Journal Journaling is an excellent activity that allows teens to reflect and be more aware of their positive experiences. However, it's common to get stuck when you are ready to write an entry. Use the journaling prompts in this worksheet to get your teen started on their journal entry. These prompts focus on positive attributes, goals, strengths, and challenges that your teen has overcome. By focusing on good things, teens will improve their self-esteem, which in turn improves their behaviors. 11. The Alphabet of Self-Esteem It is normal to struggle with our self-esteem on a daily basis. It may be caused by illness, stressful and difficult life events, or even social media. This self-esteem alphabet handout is useful for when you need a reminder of various ways to have healthy self-esteem, such as coping skills like asking for help and doing something creative. 12. My Positive Qualities Appreciating our personal positive qualities can inspire us to do better and succeed in life. Teens can use this worksheet to choose from a list of qualities they already possess or want to further develop in themselves. They can also write down the steps they can take to develop their desired qualities. 13. I Am An Amazing Person Teens with high self-esteem feel good about themselves. They believe in their abilities, don't give up easily, and are proud of their accomplishments. If your teen is struggling with low self-esteem, this worksheet can help by asking them specific questions that focus on their positive qualities, happy memories, life values, and actions that have helped others. 14. Positive Self-Talk for Self-Esteem Self-esteem is all about how we perceive and value ourselves, and practicing positive self-talk can have a great effect on the way teens see themselves. By engaging in positive self-talk, teens are more likely to believe in their abilities, which leads to fulfillment in their academic and personal lives. This worksheet encourages positive self-talk by writing down three statements teens can use when they feel sad, worried, or anxious. 15. Comfort Zone Staying in your comfort zone is best described as a state of being at ease and in control. However, stepping outside of your comfort zone can be beneficial as it provides teens with healthy challenges that allows them to explore new skills and talents. Not only that, but it also attracts new opportunities. This worksheet is an excellent tool that will help your teen step outside their comfort zone through flexibility, resilience, and confidence. 16. Self-Esteem Review Having positive self-esteem is essential for a teen's well-being as it helps them handle stress and build resilience. When young people are aware of their own self-esteem issues, they can work on improving it through helping others or mastering a new skill. This worksheet is great for teens to rate specific items related to their self-esteem. They can then write down steps to take in improving their self-esteem as well as things they are currently doing that make them feel confident. 17. My Accomplishments One of the best ways to boost a teen's self-esteem is to recognize their accomplishments, whether big or small. Being reminded of the people they've helped, the lessons they've learned, and the difficult things they've done can provide feelings of positivity and a sense of purpose. Teens can use this worksheet to write down their accomplishments and think about their future goals. 18. My Dreams It is important to encourage teens to dream big because it gives them hope and a sense of accountability. This worksheet is an engaging activity that helps teens express the things they want to be, do, or have in life. They can get creative and think of the possibilities without limitations. The feeling that anything is possible can greatly improve a teen's self-esteem. 19. Self-Esteem Checklist One of the best ways to improve a teen's self-esteem is to simply do things that make them feel healthy, happy, and well overall. Teens can use this checklist to remember to do self-care activities that they can practice regularly. When we feel happy and healthy, our self-esteem increases. 20. How My Self-Esteem Changes Self-esteem can be influenced by various things, including life events, the environment, and beliefs about the self. Teens may also place a high value on what important people in their lives might say. This worksheet allows teens to rate their self-esteem from 0 to 10 and identify what's affecting it. More importantly, it encourages them to write down the thing that make them feel good so that they can improve their self-esteem. Summary Positive self-esteem is so important as it allows teens to try new things, take healthy risks, and solve problems. These printable self-esteem worksheets for teens are just a few of the tools you can use to improve your child's well-being. Try other activities you may find that will help improve your teen's self-esteem and watch their confidence blossom. Born in Kingston upon Hull, he trained at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art, but his studies—and the early stages of his career—were curtailed by the Second World War. After initial success in revue and sketch productions, he was cast by the film producers John and Roy Boulting to star in a series of satires, starting with Private's Progress in 1956 through to I'm All Right Jack in 1959. In the mid-1960s he played Bertie Wooster for BBC Television for which he received positive reviews, including from P. G. Wodehouse, the writer who created the character of Wooster. In the early 1970s he played another upper-class literary character, Lord Peter Wimsey, the amateur but talented investigator created by Dorothy L. Sayers. Carmichael was often typecast as an affable but bumbling upper-class innocent, but he retained a disciplined approach to training and rehearsing. (Full article...) Built in the Ionic order, it is the best-known structure and symbol of pre-Christian Armenia. It has been described as the "easternmost building of the Greco-Roman world" and the only largely preserved Hellenistic building in the former Soviet Union. It is conventionally identified as a pagan temple built by King Tiridates I in the first century AD as a temple to the sun god Mihr (Mithra). It collapsed in a 1679 earthquake, but much of its fragments remained on the site. Renewed interest in the 19th century led to excavations in the early and mid-20th century. It was reconstructed in 1969–75, using the anastylosis technique. It is one of the main tourist attractions in Armenia and the central shrine of Hetanism (Armenian neopaganism). Development of the Watt steam engine in the late 18th century was an important element in the Industrial Revolution in Europe. The American Revolutionary War took place in the late 18th century. The 18th century lasted from 1 January 1701 (represented by the Roman numerals MDCCI) to 31 December 1800 (MDCCC). During the 18th century, elements of Enlightenment thinking culminated in the Atlantic Revolutions. Revolutions began to challenge the legitimacy of monarchical and aristocratic power structures. The Industrial Revolution began mid-century, leading to radical changes in human society and the environment. The European colonization of the Americas and other parts of the world intensified and associated mass migrations of people grew in size as part of the Age of Sail. During the century, slave trading expanded across the shores of the Atlantic Ocean, while declining in Russia[1] and China.[2] Western historians have occasionally defined the 18th century otherwise for the purposes of their work. For example, the "short" 18th century may be defined as 1715–1789, denoting the period of time between the death of Louis XIV of France and the start of the French Revolution, with an emphasis on directly interconnected events.[3][4] To historians who expand the century to include larger historical movements, the "long" 18th century[5] may run from the Glorious Revolution of 1688 to the Battle of Waterloo in 1815[6] or even later.[7] France was the sole world superpower from 1659, after it defeated Spain, until 1815, when it was defeated by Britain and its coalitions following the Napoleonic Wars. In Europe, philosophers ushered in the Age of Enlightenment. This period coincided with the French Revolution of 1789, and was later compromised by the excesses of the Reign of Terror. At first, many monarchies of Europe embraced Enlightenment ideals, but in the wake of the French Revolution they feared loss of power and formed broad coalitions to oppose the French Republic in the French Revolutionary Wars. Various conflicts throughout the century, including the War of the Spanish Succession and the Seven Years' War, saw Great Britain triumph over its rivals to become the preeminent power in Europe. However, Britain's attempts to exert its authority over the Thirteen Colonies became a catalyst for the American Revolution. The 18th century also marked the end of the Polish-Lithuanian Commonwealth as an independent state. Its semi-democratic government system was not robust enough to prevent partition by the neighboring states of Austria, Prussia, and Russia. In West Asia, Nader Shah led Persia in successful military campaigns. The Ottoman Empire experienced a period of peace, taking no part in European wars from 1740 to 1768. As a result, the empire was not exposed to Europe's military improvements during the Seven Years' War. The Ottoman military consequently lagged behind and suffered several defeats against Russia in the second half of the century. In South Asia, the death of Mughal emperor Aurangzeb was followed by the expansion of the Maratha Confederacy and an increasing level of European influence and control in the region. In 1739, Persian emperor Nader Shah invaded and plundered Delhi, the capital of the Mughal Empire. Later, his general Ahmad Shah Durrani scored another victory against the Marathas, the then dominant power in India, in the Third Battle of Panipat in 1761.[8] By the middle of the century, the British East India Company began to conquer eastern India,[9][8] and by the end of the century, the Anglo-Mysore Wars against Tipu Sultan and his father Hyder Ali, led to Company rule over the south.[10][11] In East Asia, the century was marked by the High Qing era, a period characterized by significant cultural and territorial expansion. This period also experienced relative peace and prosperity, allowing for societal growth, increasing literacy rates, flourishing trade, and consolidating imperial power across the vast Qing dynasty's territories. Conversely, the continual seclusion policy of the Tokugawa shogunate also brought a peaceful era called Pax Tokugawa and experienced a flourishment of the arts as well as scientific knowledge and advancements, which were introduced to Japan through the Dutch port of Nagasaki. In Southeast Asia, the Konbaung-Ayutthaya Wars and the Tây Sơn Wars broke out while the Dutch East India Company established increasing levels of control over the Mataram Sultanate. In Africa, the Ethiopian Empire underwent the Zemene Mesafint, a period when the country was ruled by a class of regional noblemen and the emperor was merely a figurehead. The Atlantic slave trade also saw the continued involvement of states such as the Oyo Empire. In Oceania, the European colonization of Australia and New Zealand began during the late half of the century. In the Americas, the United States declared its independence from Great Britain. In 1776, Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. In 1789, George Washington was inaugurated as the first president. Benjamin Franklin traveled to Europe where he was hailed as an inventor. Examples of his inventions include the lightning rod and bifocal glasses. Túpac Amaru II led an uprising that sought to end Spanish colonial rule in Peru. For a chronological guide, see Timeline of the 18th century.
