Sold For: $1,544.89 This vintage Little People Doll from 1979 is hand signed by Xavier Roberts sold for over $1,500 even in used condition. His tag identifies him as Barry Fritz and the fact that his clothes aren't original doesn't seem to have brought down his value. Sold For: $900.00 This little lady from 1985 is named Yvonne Mellie, accorded to her included, unopenedbirth certificate. Since she's in mint condition, she was able to bring in close to $1000. Also interesting is that even though her box is not in great condition, the fact that she was still sold with it may have helped her pull in a higher price. Sold For: $850.00 Meet Felicia Frances, a 1979 Xavier Roberts original. Kept in a doll cabinet for most of her life, her excellent condition was able to make her both rare and valuable. Sold For: $750.00 This little lady is from the La Princess collection and was born in 1985. Though not much was said about her on her listing, she still managed to bring in a great price, even without her papers of box. Sold For: $700.00 This vintage kid is from 1986 but is still in such mint condition that she was able to be listed as "new." She also comes with her original clothing, which bears the Cabbage Patch logo. This adorable infant comes with his own birth certificate which identifies him asAndrew Blair.It also tells us thathis birthday was August 8, 1979. Since then, bothhe and his paperwork havebeen kept in excellent condition, making thisXavier Robert original a rare find. In this Cabbage Patch Kid Guide, you can expect to find useful information that will help you price your vintage collectible doll and ensure it is fit for auction. If youve browsed the toy aisle at your local superstore, you may have noticed the reappearance and recent rise in popularity of the Cabbage Patch Kids. These soft-bodied, hard-headed, and deliciously smelling dolls are still being wish-listed with parents seeking out a special Cabbage Patch Kids. These days not only can you purchase the standard sized dolls, the addition of the Cabbage Patch Cuties means that theres something for even the littlest family members to love and cherish. If you were lucky enough to have kept your much loved Cabbage Patch Kid from your childhood, or perhaps your Little People Original, you may be now seeking an appraisal or looking to determine the current market value of these highly sought after vintage items. While Cabbage Patch Kids are far from earning the title Antique, they are in fact vintage collectible pieces. Some may collect them for their nostalgic value, while others simply have an interest in the artist or can relate to a particular Cabbage Patch Kid. It appears in the vintage market, some dolls are specifically sought after by collectors, including those with bright red hair. The one-of-a-kind Cabbage Patch Kids that were handcrafted are often highly sought after by keen collectors in comparison to the factory mass-produced CPKs. In saying this, it is always worth researching the value of your prepackaged Cabbage Patch Kid, as some of these have risen in popularity among collectors. While all Cabbage Patch Kids may appear similar, vinyl heads, soft bodies, and hair, there are some differences that set them apart and see some fetching much higher prices in the vintage market. While some CPKs were mass-produced for retail in major stores such as Target, others were specialty dolls, that were literally One of a Kind. These dolls were handcrafted and no two were ever exactly the same. This also means that it is impossible for there to be set resale values. The seller has the option to set a price for their unique vintage doll. While some of the mass-produced dolls can fetch a reasonable resale price, as there have been millions of Cabbage Patch Kids sold since the 80s, with many of them being mass-produced replicas of one another, you cannot expect to see a return of more than a few hundred dollars for your packaged Cabbage Patch Kids exist. Those that are mass-produced, boxed, and available on the shelves of toys stores and those that are specially handcrafted in Cleveland by local artists. While there is a Cabbage Patch Doll perfect for everyone, if you have the extra money on hand, purchasing a Hand-Stitched Original will ensure that you have the only doll of its kind in the world, and who knows one day that doll may make you a small fortune! The above photo was taken during the 1983 Cabbage Patch Kid frenzy when every parent tried to get their hands on a doll in time for Christmas. The dolls were mass-produced and sold at retails stores. Like any antique or vintage item, the current condition plays a major role in the overall value. This is true for the Cabbage Patch Kids. Furthermore, those sold with their original birth certificate, clothes, accessories, and box (if boxed at the time of sale) are of higher value than those who have been a childs comfort toy, dragged everywhere over the years. Before you list your Cabbage Patch Kid on any marketplace, youll want to determine the current value of your doll. Youll also want to make sure that it is a genuine Cabbage Patch Kids before listing it. A number of things to consider when listing your vintage Cabbage Patch Kid: Does my CPK sport any of the highly sought after features? (For example, those with red hair are of higher value) Is my Cabbage Patch Kid a handcrafted, one of a kind doll? (This means that the doll was not purchased from a large chain toy store) Do I have the original box and birth certificate, and boxes are of higher value to collectors) Should I clean my doll before listing it? (If a doll is cleaned properly, it may attract more bidders) Where is the best place to list my vintage Cabbage Patch Kid? (Listing your vintage item on an appropriate marketplace will ensure you have a targeted group of bidders)What is the age of my Cabbage Patch Kid? (Generally, the older the better!)Can I prove the authenticity of my Cabbage Patch Kid? (Generally, the older state) and the other the better!)Can I prove the authenticity of my Cabbage Patch Kid? (Ensure your doll is an authentic CPK) Before rushing to list your vintage Cabbage Patch Kid you should first determine that it is indeed authentic as soon after their popularity in the 80s many copies of the dolls infiltrated the market. If you were gifted the doll as a present, you may not even have been aware of its authenticity until now. To ensure that you have a real, authentic Cabbage Patch Kid you should make note of its size, craftsmanship, and features. Cabbage Patch Kids produced by the Coleco company after 1982 stood 16 inches tall and featured the soft bodies and vinyl heads that we relate the trademark to while those first produced by Xavier Roberts himself, the real and original Cabbage Patch Kids were entirely soft. Knowing the timeline of Cabbage Patch Production will allow you to determine whether or not your Cabbage Patch Kid is genuine. While there is no exact value for any vintage item, a rough value can be created by the current market demand for a particular piece. The value of your Cabbage Patch Kid will ultimately depend on the following aspects: The condition of the doll If the original box, birth certificate and clothing will be includedThe popularity of the particular doll you have on handThe date your Cabbage Patch Kid, it is important to understand the difference between the licensed dolls and those specialty dolls. While some of the licensed, mass-produced dolls can earn an owner a nice sum of money, it is generally the specialty Cabbage Patch Dolls that are the most valued by collectors. During the 80s, a single Cabbage Patch Doll retailed somewhere between $10 and $30 USD. Today, an exclusive CPK can be purchased directly from their homeland website for $69.00 USD. To read more about the worth of your Cabbage Patch Kid, see our related article here. One mans treasure is a saying that can be used when talking about Cabbage Patch Kids. While one doll may not be valuable to one collector, another may resonate with the name or style of the doll and offer a higher price at auction to ensure they are able to add that particular doll to their collectors. Original Coleco CPK (1983 and 1984) Cabbage Patch Doll, generally the following dolls are of most value to collectors: Original Coleco CPK (1983 and 1984) If you intend on selling your vintage Cabbage Patch Kid, ensure you do not machine wash it. If you wish to clean it up prior to taking photos to list it for sale, ensure you do so by hand and with chemical-free soap. If the doll has patches of dirt, cleaning it up prior to listing it will definitely increase the likelihood of a successful sale as long as you do not damage the doll in doing so. If you are lucky enough to have an original Cabbage Patch Kid, often known as a Little People Original, you should speak to an antique appraiser before attempting to wash it at home. If you intend on washing your Cabbage Patch Kid: Use gentle baby shampoo to wash the hair of the Cabbage Patch Doll. Try a magic eraser for any pen found on the face, if the stain wont budge youll cause more damage by scrubbing than trying to sell the doll as is If you bath your Cabbage Patch Doll, gently squeeze out the excess water and place it outside to dry. While generally, we use direct sunlight to dry clothes, in the case of a vintage item, you may like to place it undercover to dry. For the doll to dry out completely, it may take a number of days. Listing your CPK on a dedicated vintage website will increase the likelihood of you fetching your asking price. Many choose to sell their Cabbage Patch vintage dolls on Etsy or you can join the dedicated collectors club if you intend on dabbling in the buying and selling of a number of vintage CPKs. If you are looking for a quick sale of your Cabbage Patch Kid, listing it on a classifieds website or the Facebook Market place may be appropriate. The more information and pictures you add of your Cabbage Patch Kid, the higher the chance of fetching a high price and buyer is. Including the following photos will increase the likelihood of a successful sale: BodyFace HairStamp and Signature Birth Certificate Box If you are looking to purchase a new Cabbage Patch Kid, many different marketplaces will have them for sale and it is really just a matter of searching for one that meets your criteria. Robert called his own creation The Little People. They were actually modified versions of Martha Nelson did hers too. Robert would tell people the dolls werent for sale but that they could be adopted at a price ranging from sixty to as much as a thousand dollars. Robert sold the dolls at arts and crafts shows before opening a clinic that he called BabyLand General Hospital in Cleveland, Georgia where the employees dressed up like doctors and nurses and took care of the dolls in cribs as if they were real babies. Robert tried to copyright his creation but couldnt use the name, The Little People because Little People was already in use by McDonalds. In 1978he copyrighted Cabbage Patch Babies. He soon became a multimillionaire from the sales of the babies. He created a story around the dolls claiming that the babies were born over and over again. But soon Martha Nelson came out of the shadows to claim back her creation. A court battle ensued that lasted six years. How To Identify Antique Cabbage Patch DollImitation cabbage patch dolls flooded the market shortly after Robert Xaviers dolls started making huge sales. Hence, you have to be sure your cabbage doll sizes changed from the first ones produced by Xavier and down the years that production changed hands repeatedly. For example, the ones produced by Coleco in 1982were 16 inches tall. Knowing and following the timeline of changes from one designer to the other helps you compare and identify genuine dolls. FeaturesGenuine cabbage dolls have soft bodies. In 1989Mattel introduced dolls. with all vinyl bodies and 2 inches smaller than the original dolls. CraftsmanshipIt is fairly easy to tell the cabbage patch doll that is handcrafted from the ones that were mass produced in factories in China. Handcrafted dolls share similarities but are never the same in details as the dolls each were designed with their own personalities. Are Cabbage Patch Dolls Still Made?Yes, the kids are still being made. The cabbage patch kids became icons. They went from being friends to real babies to gracing stamps, they went to space, they became mascots in games. Today they are vintage and sought after by collectors. Some of them have been sold at really high prices.But by the end of the first decade of their existence 65 million kids have been sold around the world. The place where they are supposedly born, Babyland General Hospital still exists. It was originally located in Cleveland. In 2010the hospital moved to the North Georgia mountains. It now sits on 650 acres of land. In 2010the hospital still exists. cabbage kids like they used to back in the days. They now mass produce cabbage patch kids, soft faced and hand stitched like the old times. Employees in the Hospital still dress in scrubs like doctors and nurses, and the kids are still laid up in incubators and cribs, like real babies. So if you want to buy new cabbage kids instead of vintage ones you can purchase them on Amazon or other online stores. ConclusionIt is interesting that even though cabbage patch kids had a little murk in the middle of their history, they remain favorite dolls for both parents and kids. The whole of America voted for the dolls to be featured as mascots for the US Olympic team in Barcelona and Atlanta in 1992and 1996 respectively. The value of your doll or merchandise can increase or decrease depending on which company manufactured it. Coleco had sold more than 3 million dolls by the end of 1983. By 1990, 65 million Cabbage Patch Kids had found their forever home. This shows just how popular these soft-bodied dolls were only a few years after being introduced. The most valuable Cabbage Patch Kid brand name. The original CPK produced by Xavier Roberts himself, known as Little People Originals made prior to 1982 are among the most valuable dolls. Some of the Little People Originals that are still in mint condition can sell for as much as 100 times their original retail value. The original retail value. The original price with some seeing their worth increase five to tenfold. The first mass-market Cabbage Patch Kids, were introduced in 1983, and lines of mothers and fathers filled shop fronts as everyone tried to get their hands on a doll for their children in time for ChristmasWhen speaking about mass-market Cabbage Patch Kids, those worth the most to collectors are twins, made in Japan editions, black-skinned kids with freckles, kids with fuzzy hair, kids with strawberry blonde or red hair and those sold with their original clothes, birth certificate, and box. There is no one specific value for any Cabbage Patch Kid. While the mass market kids will have other identical dolls around the globe, there were many variations produced especially during 1982 in time for Christmas. The talking Cabbage Patch Kids were first introduced by the Coleco company during 1987This was the first cabbage Patch Kids with random phrases, but would also speak when certain body parts such as the hand were touchedWhile these dolls were loved by many, due to their hefty original retail price of over $100.00 and the fact that multiple needed to be purchased to take advantage of all the vocalisation of the doll, they fell short of expectations the company had A talking Cabbage Patch Doll produced in 1987 is often resold for anywhere between $60.00 and $300.00 USD. During 1989 the Sippin Cabbage Patch Kids were released which brought a new spin on the original dolls. These new dolls could really sip from their drink. These new dolls could really sell within the vintage market for more than $70.00 USD. If you remember the spin on the original dolls. Cabbage Patch Kid The Snack Time Cabbage Patch Kid was able to swallow plastic food that would travel through metal rollers within the doll and could be retrieved from shelves soon after it was released due to concerns about children getting their fingers stuck within the dolls mouth and metal rollers. These dolls are extremely rare due to them being recalled shortly after their release and therefore owners of these dolls often place hefty price tags on them of over $200.00 USD. Believe it or not, but during 1985, a box of breakfast cereal was low in sugar, primarily consisting of rice flour. The cereal was shaped into little round faces, that looked similar to the three-dimensional dolls. If youve kept the box from the original cereal all these years, some have been able to sell it for as much as $50.00 USD. Thats right, the Cabbage Patch Kids made it onto their very own US stamp. The stamp was worth 33 cents at the time of release during the year 2000 which commemorated the 1980s. While the stamp is far from making an owner a fortune, with them mostly for sale in vintage markets for no more than $5.00 USD, they are a great item for a CPK collector to display. Below you can find a list of just a handful of the different items produced under the Cabbage Patch Kid label. While many think that this brand is only related to the dolls we know and love, it went much further than this producing everything from doll accessories to edible cereal. History of Cabbage Patch Dolls The history of cabbage patch dolls began with a 21 year old Robert Xavier, an art student at a missionary school in North Georgia. He discovered the woman rejected the idea of selling dolls she fondly called Doll Babies. Robert went ahead and had a woman named Debbie Moorehead hand stitch dolls that shared striking resemblance with Martha Nelsons Doll Babies. Robert called his own creation The Little People. They were actually modified versions of Martha Nelsons dolls. The dolls also came with birth certificates, adoption papers, exactly like Martha Nelsons dolls. The dolls also came with birth certificates adoption papers, exactly like Martha Nelsons dolls. werent for sale but that they could be adopted at a price ranging from sixty to as much as a thousand dollars. Robert sold the dolls at arts and crafts shows before opening a clinic that he called BabyLand General Hospital in Cleveland, Georgia where the employees dressed up like doctors and nurses and took care of the dolls in cribs as if they were real babies. Robert tried to copyright his creation but couldnt use the name, The Little People because Little People was already in use by McDonalds. In 1978he copyrighted Cabbage Patch Babies. He soon became a multimillionaire from the sales of the babies. He constructed a story around the dolls claiming that the babies were born over and over again.But soon Martha Nelson came out of the shadows to claim back her creation. A court battle ensued that lasted six years. Martha Nelson got a settlement and settled back into self induced obscurity but Roberts business began to decline shortly after. The Value Of Vintage Cabbage Patch Dolls are making a comeback after three decades of quiet. Folks who grew up with the dolls as kids are just now finding them interesting all over again. Nostalgic for the past, there are collectors from that era who are now looking for the cabbage doll, the more valuable they are, like a true vintage item. The most valuable of the lot happens to be the ones before Robert Xavier made the deal with Coleco. In 1982the design team of the company Coleco devised a plastic headed cabbage patch doll with better features, softer bodies and with a normal toddlers size instead of the bigger ones that Robert started with. These were the designs that the public loved and went crazy for in the 80s. The dolls before Coleco are now worth from $500to $2000or more.Dolls With Adoption PapersMost of the cabbage patch doll increases if it has its adoption papers and birth certificate intact. With the papers complete the doll can be said for a couple hundred. Valuing And Selling, it is important that you dont rush into the sale just yet. You might want to pause and consider how much your doll is likely to earn. Prices can be pretty much subjective. Sellers of vintage items post their stuff on eBay then they feel their item is worth. You can do a preliminary research on eBay about your own cabbage doll. Type into the search bar on eBay the model and year of your doll. You are very likely to get pages of results showing what others are selling the model for. That should give you an idea of how much your cabbage patch doll include; A box and adoption papers the condition of your dollPopularity of the style of dollDate of manufactureNumber of the doll listed on the marketplaceA Box And Adoption Papers These things increase the worth of dolls. Some of the ones that have sold for high amounts have their adoption papers, then you should post pictures of the papers along with the dolls. Collectors will buy the doll higher. The ConditionA badly stored doll will lose its sheen, become threadbare. This reduces its worth considerably. If its torn or damaged then it may not impress collectors and you will get low bids for your cabbage patch doll. See also 15 Rarest And Most Valuable Fenton Glass Worth MoneyPopularity Of The StyleCabbage Patch Dolls were produced in their millions. There were two categories that were produced; the ones that were produced more plentifully. Remember, rarity is important to value. If your doll is one of those that were produced in millions, this drastically reduces the value since there are probably hundreds of dolls like yours on the market. But if your doll fulfills the other factors like possessing adoption papers then your chances are increased. Date Of Manufacture The early 80s are more valuable than the ones that were made in the late and early 90s.Number Of The Doll Listed On The MarketThe higher the number of your type doll, the lower the value collectors will put on the doll. And the opposite is the case too. So. Before you put up your doll for sale and put a price on it, you need to know how many of your dolls are already on eBay.How To Identify Antique Cabbage Patch DollImitation cabbage doll is genuine before exhibiting it. The following are the ways to identify vintage cabbage patch doll:SizeCabbage doll sizes changed from the first ones produced by Xavier and down the years that production changed hands repeatedly. For example, the ones produced by Coleco in 1982were 16 inches tall. Knowing and following the timeline of changes from one designer to the other helps you compare and identify genuine dolls. Features Genuine cabbage dolls have soft bodies and vinyl heads. The ones Robert Xavier first created on the other hand had soft heads and bodies. In 1989Mattel introduced dolls with all vinyl bodies and 2 inches smaller than the original dolls. CraftsmanshipIt is fairly easy to tell the cabbage patch dolls with all vinyl bodies and 2 inches smaller than the original dolls. similarities but are never the same in details as the dolls each were designed with their own personalities. Are Cabbage Patch Dolls Still Made? Yes, the kids are still being made. The cabbage patch kids became icons. They went from being friends to real babies to gracing stamps, they went to space, they became mascots in games. Today they are vintage and sought after by collectors. Some of them have been sold at really high prices. But by the end of the first decade of their existence 65 million kids have been sold around the world. The place where they are supposedly born, Babyland General Hospital still exists. It was originally located in Cleveland. In 2010the hospital moved to the North Georgia mountains. It now sits on 650 acres of land. In 2014 the company started producing the kids, and started making cabbage kids like they used to back in the days. They now mass produce cabbage patch kids, soft faced and hand stitched like the old times. laid up in incubators and cribs, like real babies. So if you want to buy new cabbage kids instead of vintage ones you can purchase them on Amazon or other online stores. ConclusionIt is interesting that even though cabbage patch kids had a little murk in the middle of their history, they remain favorite dolls for both parents and kids. The whole of America voted for the dolls to be featured as mascots for the US Olympic team in Barcelona and Atlanta in 1992 and 1996 respectively. The bond between these dolls and the American people is inseparable partly because the woman Martha Nelson was such a cool headed woman who just wanted to go back to living her life after a while. And Robert Xavier just wanted to do business and make money. Everyone seemed to get why they wanted to, even Xavier who now tends to the lawns of the BabyLand General Hospital. MORE FROM ASK.COM During the 1980s, Xavier Roberts unique Cabbage Patch kidserupted into immediate popularity. Before he struck his claim to fame though, he had relatively humble beginnings. The idea behind Cabbage Patch Kids was inspired by an old German fabric technique called needle molding. Using this technique called needle molding. various art shows in different locations until eventually Atlanta Weekly Magazine picked up his story. The growing success of the dolls was later documented through both The Wall street Journal and Newsweek. After signing contract with Appalachian Artworks, Inc. in 1982, Xavier changed the name of his dolls to Cabbage Patch Kids. It didnt take long for these unique toys to start flying off the shelves. The dolls he created were all distinctly recognizable by their original features and fabrications. Cabbage Patch Kids came in varying ethnicities and were targeted at both girl and boy audiences. But how popular are these dolls now? If you are a collector who took good care of your dolls from the 80s, you might be able to get up to a few thousand dollars for your Cabbage Patch Kids In 2025Which Cabbage Patch Kids are the most valuable in 2025? Lets find out.1. James Dudley $3,000 jersey with the number 31 on the front. He also has matching blue and white shoes and like all Cabbage Patch kids, comes with official adoption papers. Theres also a signature on the rear. And dont be fooled by his seemingly ordinary name; depending on the condition, he can easily fetch upwards of $3,000 in an auction. 2. Teresa Ann $2,000 Teresa Ann is one of several red-headed dolls in the lineup. Known for her ginger pigtails, she has been featured in a number of different outfits, which have made her a favorite amongst many collectors. Some have even dressed her in homemade or third-party clothes. For her to fetch the highest price, however, she must have her original pink dress. Not only that, but her box and birth certificate must also be intact. In April 2021, one of these dolls sold for $2,000 on eBay.3. Barry Fritz $1,500 market. Appearance-wise, he has dark curly hair and wears a pair of red overalls with vertical yellow stripes. And depending on the condition, he can go anywhere from $1,000 to $2,000 at auctionas long as hes certified to be authentic. Even if his clothes are not original, he usually fetches a high price due to his rarity and prestige4. Yvonne Millie

$800 to $1,000Yvonne Millie wears a lacy sundress with white socks and shoes. Originally released in 1985, there arent too many of her in circulation, which drives up the price when she shows up at auction. For example, she usually goes for $800 to $1,000, assuming that shes in good condition. The price will go down if there is any visible wear and tear on her clothes or body and will drop further if the original box is not included (even a damaged box will make the doll a lot more valuable).5. Felicia Francis $850 Felicia Francis $850 Felicia Francis was originally released in 1979 and was a hit among kidsmainly due to her long, blonde hair, which could be brushed and braided. Not only does she have bright blue eyes, but she also wears a baby blue apron and matching bloomers, both of which cartificate, the latter of which comes pinned to her outfit.6. Anne Greta $800The Anne Greta Cabbage Patch Kid came out in 1989. If anything, shes one of only a few from that year to have a following decades later. Known for her strawberry blonde hair, she has bright blue eyes and wears a plaited skirt, the latter of which points to her potential Scottish heritage. While her resale value rarely goes up into the quadruple digits, shes still valuable to many collectorseven if she doesnt come with the original box. Of course, the price will be higher if its included (that and her original birth certificate).7. Andrew Blair $700 Andrew Blair is different from the other Cabbage Patch Kids on our list in that hes a baby (as opposed to an infant or toddler). As such, he comes with fewer accessories like ribbons and bows. Not only that, but he also doesnt have any hair, which makes sense given his age. Still, he can be worth a pretty penny at auctionupwards of $700 depending on the condition. This is especially true if he comes with his original scarf and jacket, as well as his birth certificate and box.8. Adam Gregory $600Adam Gregory was released in 1979, making him one of the oldest Cabbage Patch Kids. A young infant, he has dark brown eyes and wears a white shirt. Given his age, there arent many still in circulation, which makes him more valuable to collectors. At an auction, he can fetch up to $600 if he comes with his original box, clothes, and birth certificate. Even if hes wearing third-party clothes, its still possible to get a few hundred dollars due to his rarity.9. Roddy Cyrano is unique in that hes one of only a few Cabbage Patch Kids to show his knees. Known for his curly blonde hair, he wears a red hat and a pair of navy blue overalls, the latter of which comes with his birth certificate. Even without his original box, he can go for upwards of $300. With the box and birth certificate, however, his auction price is much higherusually around the $500 range. And the fact that there arent many in circulation only makes him that much harder to get. 10. Zora Mae $100Zora Mae is worth 2-3 times more than the average Cabbage Patch doll, even though she was made in 1992. This has to do with the fact that she was created to celebrate the brands 10th anniversary. And like all special edition toys, she had a small, limited run, which makes her much harder to get. Appearance-wise, she has long, blonde hair and blue eyes and comes with a limited-edition pink floral dress, sun hat, and matching pink booties. With the original box and birth certificate, she can fetch upwards of $100, sometimes more, depending on the condition. In the 80s, Cabbage Patch Kids are instantly recognizable to anyone who grew up during that time or raised kids back in the day. Millions of the dolls were sold, and they were so popular that in 1983, there were Cabbage Patch Kid Riots as parents fought to get their hands on the coveted dolls at toy stores and department stores. Some parents even paid well above the sticker price to ensure they could get the toys for their little ones. Decades later, you can still buy Cabbage Patch Kids as collectors items. If you have a classic Cabbage Patch Kids as collectors items. If you have a classic Cabbage Patch Kids as collectors items. what you should know. A young Drew Barrymore cuddles up with a Cabbage Patch Kid in the 1984 movie FirestarterDe Laurentiis/Paramount/Kobal/Shutterstock The dolls that would eventually become known as Cabbage Patch Kids were initially conceptualized by Xavier Roberts in the late 70s. Roberts dolls were originally called Little People Originals, and he first sold them at arts and crafts shows. By 1981, the Little People Originals, which already looked just like the iconic Cabbage Patch Kids, began receiving media coverage, and they were soon renamed. In 1983, Newsweek featured a cover story on The Cabbage Patch Kids, began receiving media coverage, and they were soon renamed. In 1983, Newsweek featured a cover story on The Cabbage Patch Kids, began receiving media coverage, and they were soon renamed. the dolls came with adoption papers and birth certificates created a sense of personal connection more than just dolls, many girls felt like the Cabbage Patch Kids were their babies, and they treasured them as such. The craze for these whimsical toys spawned merchandise, TV specials and even crude parodies (remember Garbage Pail Kids?) and Cabbage Patch mania continued throughout the 80s. Cabbage Patch Kids may look wholesome, but you might be surprised to learn these dolls have caused some controversy. While Roberts is credited as their creator, the folk artist Martha Nelson Thomas alleged that he copied her designs after they met at an art fair in 1976 and she declined to works. with him. Thomas filed a lawsuit against Roberts, which was settled for an undisclosed amount. The extreme popularity of Cabbage Patch Kids meant they had a high resale value from the beginning. In fact, reports in the early 80s said that the dolls were re-adopted for up to 100 times their original price. The inclusion of adoption papers and birth certificates was a particularly savvy move that made them feel one-of-a-kind and extra valuable, even if they were mass-produced. The Cabbage Patch Kids also sported signatures from Xavier Roberts on their backsides, which further enhanced the sense that they were more valuable than your average doll. If youre looking to sell a Cabbage Patch Kid, the signature provides the added benefit of identifying the year of manufacture, as different colors were used in different years, and the signature sometimes had the year listed next to it. As with any collectible, it helps to have the original packaging. The official Cabbage Patch Kids website notes that while There are literally hundreds of thousands of different Cabbage Patch Kids that have been delivered in the past 30 plus years making it impossible for us to monitor individual values, potential sellers should know that In order to request maximum value for your Cabbage Patch Kid from a collector, you should be able to provide the babys original adoption papers and original clothing. The Cabbage Patch Kids site features a Collectors Club, which puts you in touch with others who are looking to buy and sell the dolls. Annual membership to sell your dolls. Theres a large selection of the dolls on eBay, and as the Cabbage Patch Kids site says, The true value of an individual Cabbage Patch Kid or Little Person is the re-adoption fee a third party might be willing to give you for your specific Kid or Baby. 9-year-old Ebony Creed poses with her grandmothers collection of 133 Cabbage Patch Kids in 2012Shutterstock The most valuable Cabbage Patch Kids are the ones produced by Coleco from the 80s. Coleco went out of business in 1988, and the popularity of the dolls began to wane. In the years that followed, the Cabbage Patch Kids had short stints with a variety of different producers, among them Hasbro, Mattel and Toys R Us, but they never quite replicated their 80s heights, as new toy crazes like Beanie Babies and Tickle Me Elmo eventually took over. However, the nostalgia for all things 80s means that Cabbage Patch Kids often sell for hundreds (or, in rare cases, thousands!) today. He discovered the dolls made by a woman named Martha Nelson and wanted to sell them but the woman rejected the idea of selling dolls she fondly called Doll Babies. Robert called his own creation The Little People. They were actually modified versions of Martha Nelsons dolls. The dolls also came with birth certificates, adoption papers, exactly like Martha Nelson did hers too. Robert would tell people the dolls werent for sale but that they could be adopted at a price ranging from sixty to as much as a thousand dollars. Robert sold the dolls at arts and crafts shows before opening a clinic that he called BabyLand General Hospital in Cleveland, Georgia where the employees dressed up like doctors and nurses and took care of the dolls in cribs as if they were real babies. Robert tried to copyright his creation but couldn't use the name, The Little People was already in use by McDonalds. In 1978he copyrighted Cabbage Patch Babies. He soon became a multimillionaire from the sales of the babies. He created a story around the dolls claiming that the babies. He soon became a multimillionaire from the sales of the babies. Martha Nelson got a settlement and settled back into self induced obscurity but Roberts business began to decline shortly after. The Value Of Vintage Cabbage Patch Dolls are making a comeback after three decades of quiet. the past, there are collectors from that era who are now looking for the dolls and buying them. Vintage cabbage patch doll value is often categorized into: The Dolls Before The Coleco DealThe older the cabbage doll, the more valuable they are, like a true vintage item. The most valuable of the lot happens to be the ones before Robert Xavier made the deal with Coleco. In 1982 the design team of the company Coleco devised a plastic headed cabbage patch doll with better features, softer bodies and with a normal toddlers size instead of the bigger ones that Robert started with. These were the designs that the public loved and went crazy for in the 80s. The dolls before Coleco are now worth from $500to $2000or more.Dolls With Adoption Papers and birth certificate intact. With the papers complete the doll can be said for a couple hundred.Valuing And Selling Your Collectible Cabbage Patch KidIf you have a cabbage patch doll that you are thinking of selling, it is important that you dont rush into the sale just yet. You might want to pause and consider how much your doll is likely to earn. Prices can be pretty much subjective. Sellers of vintage items post their stuff on eBay then they fix a price that they feel their item is worth. You can do a preliminary research on eBay about your own cabbage doll. Type into the search bar on eBay about your cabbage patch doll is worth. Further factors that influence the value of cabbage patch doll include; A box and adoption papers The condition of your dollPopularity of the style of dollDate of manufacture Number of the doll listed on the market place A box and Adoption Papers These things increase the worth of dolls. Some of the ones that have sold for high amounts have their adoption papers complete and most come in their boxes. If your doll has adoption papers, then you should post pictures of the papers along with the dolls. Collectors will buy the doll higher. The ConditionA badly stored doll will lose its sheen, become threadbare. This reduces its worth considerably. If its torn or damaged then it may not impress collectors and you will get low bids for your cabbage patch doll. Handcrafted dolls share similarities but are never the same in details as the dolls each were designed with their own personalities. Are Cabbage Patch Dolls Still Made?Yes, the kids are still being made. The cabbage patch kids became icons. They went from being friends to real babies to gracing stamps, they went to space, they became mascots in games. Today they are vintage and sought after by collectors. Some of them have been sold at really high prices. But by the end of the first decade of their existence 65 million kids have been sold around the world. The place where they are supposedly born, Babyland General Hospital still exists. It was originally located in Cleveland. In 2010the hospital moved to the North Georgia mountains. It now sits on 650 acres of land. In 2010the hospital still exists. in the days. They now mass produce cabbage patch kids, soft faced and hand stitched like the old times. Employees in the Hospital still dress in scrubs like doctors and nurses, and the kids are still laid up in incubators and cribs, like real babies. So if you want to buy new cabbage kids instead of vintage ones you can purchase them on Amazon or other online stores. ConclusionIt is interesting that even though cabbage patch kids had a little murk in the middle of their history, they remain favorite dolls for be featured as mascots for the US Olympic team in Barcelona and Atlanta in 1992and 1996 respectively. The bond between these dolls and the American people is inseparable partly because the woman Martha Nelson was such a cool headed woman who just wanted to go back to living her life after a while. And Robert Xavier just wanted to do business and make money. Everyone seemed to get why they wanted to do business and make money. General Hospital. If youre an 80s or 90s kid, you must be familiar with Cabbage Patch dolls. And you mightve also noticed that you dont find them in the market now! Well, the company, Coleco, which made these dolls, had to stop production in the 1990s because of bank issues. But its not like we had many Cabbage Patch dolls before that. History of Cabbage Patch Dolls The history of cabbage patch dolls began with a 21 year old Robert Xavier, an art student at a missionary school in North Georgia. He discovered the dolls sheet Xavier, and wanted to sell them but the woman rejected the idea of selling dolls sheet Xavier, and art student at a missionary school in North Georgia. fondly called Doll Babies. Robert went ahead and had a woman named Debbie Moorehead hand stitch dolls that shared striking resemblance with Martha Nelsons of Martha Nelsons dolls. The dolls also came with birth certificates, adoption papers, exactly like Martha Nelson did hers too. Robert would tell people the dolls at arts and crafts shows before opening a clinic that he called BabyLand General Hospital in Cleveland, Georgia where the employees dressed up like doctors and nurses and took care of the dolls in cribs as if they were real babies. Robert tried to copyright his creation but couldnt use the name, The Little People because Little People was already in use by McDonalds. In 1978he copyright his created a story around the dolls claiming that the babies were born over and over again. But soon Martha Nelson came out of the shadows to claim back her creation. A court battle ensued that lasted six years. Martha Nelson got a settlement and settled back into self induced obscurity but Roberts business began to decline shortly after. The Value Of Vintage Cabbage Patch Dolls Cabbage Patch Dolls are making a comeback after three decades of quiet. Folks who grew up with the dolls as kids are just now finding them. Vintage cabbage patch doll value is often categorized into: The Dolls Before The Coleco DealThe older the cabbage doll, the more valuable they are, like a true vintage item. The most valuable of the lot happens to be the ones before Robert Xavier made the deal with Coleco. In 1982the design team of the company Coleco devised a plastic headed cabbage patch doll with better features, softer bodies and with a normal toddlers size instead of the bigger ones that Robert started with. These were the designs that the public loved and went crazy for in the 80s. The dolls from the 80s have lost their papers. Some have had their clothes changed or rerooted. Others are severely stained or torn. The value of the cabbage patch doll increases if it has its adoption papers and birth certificate intact. With the papers complete the doll can be said for a couple hundred. Valuing And Selling Your Collectible Cabbage Patch KidIf you have a cabbage patch doll that you are thinking of selling, it is important that you dont rush into the sale just yet. History of Cabbage Patch Dolls The history of Cabbage Patch Dolls made by a woman named Martha Nelson and wanted to sell them but the woman rejected the idea of selling dolls she fondly called Doll Babies. Robert went ahead and had a woman named Debbie Moorehead hand stitch dolls that shared striking resemblance with Martha Nelsons of Martha Nelsons dolls. The dolls also came with birth certificates, adoption papers, exactly like Martha Nelson did hers too. Robert would tell people the dolls at arts and crafts shows before opening a clinic that he called BabyLand General Hospital in Cleveland, Georgia where the employees dressed up like doctors and nurses and took care of the dolls in cribs as if they were real babies. Robert tried to copyright his creation but couldnt use the name, The Little People because Little People because Little People because Little People was already in use by McDonalds. In 1978he copyrighted Cabbage Patch Babies. He soon became a multimillionaire from the sales of the babies. He created a story around the dolls claiming that the babies were born over and over again. But soon Martha Nelson got a settlement and settled back into self induced obscurity but Roberts business began to decline shortly after. The Value Of Vintage Cabbage Patch Dolls are making a comeback after three decades of quiet. Folks who grew up with the dolls as kids are just now finding them interesting all over again. They went from being friends to real babies to gracing stamps, they are vintage and sought after by collectors. Some of them have been sold at really high prices. But by the end of the first decade of their existence 65 million kids have been sold around the world. The place where they are supposedly born, Babyland General Hospital still exists. It was originally located in Cleveland. In 2010the hospital moved to the North Georgia mountains. It now sits on 650 acres of land. In 2014the company started producing the kids and started making cabbage kids like they used to back in the days. They now mass produce cabbage patch kids, soft faced and hand stitched like the old times. Employees in the Hospital still dress in scrubs like doctors and nurses, and the kids are still laid up in incubators and cribs, like real babies. So if you want to buy new cabbage kids instead of vintage ones you can purchase them on Amazon or other online stores. ConclusionIt is interesting that even though cabbage patch kids had a little murk in the middle of their history, they remain favorite dolls for both parents and kids. The whole of America voted for the dolls to be featured as mascots for the US Olympic team in Barcelona and Atlanta in 1992and 1996 respectively. The bond between these dolls and the American people is inseparable partly because the woman Martha Nelson was such a cool headed woman who just wanted to go back to living her life after a while. And Robert Xavier just wanted to go back to living her life after a while woman Martha Nelson was such a cool headed woman who just wanted to go back to living her life after a while. tends to the lawns of the BabyLand General Hospital.
