Continue

Plato's closet prices

Our inventory is constantly updating, with new, hand-picked items put out on the floor each day. New styles and sizes are brought in by teens and twenty-somethings just like you, so the options are truly endless. At up to 70% off regular retail, it's a win-win! With 92 million tons of clothing-related waste ending up in landfills each year, there's no doubt that we've got to rethink our fashion choices. For anyone trying to build a more sustainable wardrobe, there are two hurdles to overcome: limiting the amount of old or unwanted items that go to landfills and finding more eco-friendly ways to purchase new additions. Second-hand stores like Plato's Closet help with both, and you get to make a little money from it too!Keep reading to learn how Plato's Closet and similar stores are helping reduce textile waste and making it easier to shop more sustainably. We'll go through everything you need to know about selling used items from your wardrobe, including the brands Plato's Closet prioritizes, how much they pay for things, as well as 11 alternative stores to consider. It's time to clean out your closet ... Plato's Closet is a second-hand clothing business with brick-and-mortar stores in multiple states across the USA. Their focus is buying gently used clothes, shoes, and accessories that fall into the teen and young adult category. That said, anyone can approach them with items to sell and customers of all ages are likely to find great pieces in store. Is Upcycling and Buying Second Hand Worth It? Even the best clothing purchases sometimes don't work out. Bodies and personal style change over time and we inevitably end up with that pile of clothes in our wardrobe that never gets touched. As the saying goes though, one person's trash is another's treasure, and the clothes you don't wear anymore may be exactly what someone else is looking for. Stores like Plato's Closet offer an easy, accessible way to sell clothes and contribute to a slower, more sustainable fashion cycle that reduces how much ends up in landfills and instead, gives your unused items a second life with someone who can enjoy them. What's not to love? How does Plato's Closet work? The thing that most often leads people to throw out unworn clothes rather than sell them is time constraints. Listing items on sites like Facebook Marketplace can be very tedious, but thankfully, Plato's Closet makes things much easier. This is how their stores work and how you can sell items with them: Bring your gently used clothes and accessories into the store, no appointment necessary. Their staff will inspect and price the clothes while you browse the store, pour gently used clothes to Plato's Closet The most important aspect to note with Plato's Closet is that the items cannot be stained or damaged. They're specifically looking for pieces that are only gently used. Before taking any clothing to sell, make sure everything is freshly laundered and check for stains, color fading, or any damage. If you've got items that aren't in good enough condition for reselling, consider taking them to be recycled or finding out if any nearby charities will take them as donations. What Brands and Items Does Plato's Closet Take? Plato's Closet takes all sorts of brands and items, from body suits to sweatshirts and rompers. They also take athletic and outerwear, footwear, and accessories such as jewelry, belts, and bags. The only items not worth taking in are the obvious kind, such as swimwear and underwear. Some of their more popular brands include Vans, H&M, Free People, and Urban Outfitters but most recognizable brand names are accepted there. Where sellers may have a hard time is if they come in with an item that the store already has a huge backlog of. If that's the case, it might simply be worth taking your clothes to another Plato's Closet branch to be evaluated. Just make sure to ask their sales assistant for an explanation if items get rejected or the pricing isn't as expected. The information may very well help you sell the item at a different branch or store. Does Plato's Closet Buy and Sell Halloween Costumes?Yes! Plato's closet now buys and sells pre-loved halloween apparel. You can take your stash of halloween costumes to Plato's Closet but make sure they have been laundered and are in good condition prior to taking them in.If you're planning a DIY halloween costume this year, be sure to check out our guide to sustainable DIY halloween costumes. How Much Does Plato's Closet Pay Users for Clothes? How much they'll pay per item depends on the brand, original value, and the condition it's in. Something more worn. How Does Plato's Closet Price Clothes? Plato's Closet sells most of their items at 70% less than the original purchase value and gives about a third of the sale price to the person who brings them in. For example, if they sell a T-shirt you brought in for $10, you'll receive $3. Some might be disappointed by that figure but what is great about Plato's Closet is you get that money upfront and don't have to wait for items to sell or be involved in trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. We won't lie, it's not great for people trying to market the pieces. and to wait until items are sold before they receive any money.11 Alternatives to Plato's Closet: A List of Similar Upcycling and Vintage StoresIf you don't have a Plato's Closet store near you or are simply interested in alternatives, here are 11 other popular second-hand clothing businesses that you can sell items through: ThredUpThredUp is one of the largest resale platforms, stocking primarily women's and children's items. They offer a "clean out" service in which users send in pre-loved items and, once they've sold, can earn either cash or credit for the site. Sending items in has to be covered by the seller. Uptown CheapskateLike Plato's Closet, you can visit this chain of second-hand clothing stores in person and have your items priced and sold on the spot. They take a wide variety of pieces and will pay a slightly higher premium for niche brands or things in high demand. Poshmark provides a pre-paid shipping label and users get their money for the item as soon it's delivered to its new home. Clothes Mentor this resale chain focuses on women's clothes Mentor store for evaluation. Something to note is that this is one of the few second-hand stores that accepts clothes all the way to a size 26.Crossroads TradingUnlike other stores mentioned so far, Crossroads Trading offers multiple avenues to people looking at selling second-hand items in for credit or cash. Buffalo Exchange Buffalo Exchange is a big fashion resale brand for men and women that allows you to buy, sell, or trade your worn clothes, jewelry, and accessories that are still in good condition. You do not need an appointment; simply carry your ID and get paid cash on the spot or trade for unique items in the store. Depop Depop is an online marketplace that combines social media and online shopping. You can create your profile, list your items, and connect with buyers directly. It's trendy among eco-conscious millennials and Gen Z and is a great way to sell unique or niche fashion items. Vestiaire website and they will advise you on the best price for your garment. Once sold, Vastiaire handles the shipping process, providing a prepaid shipping kit for your convenience. They do not charge you for listing but deduct a selling fee of 12% or $12 for items priced below $100. The RealRealThis luxury consignment website offers a way to sell high-end designer clothing, accessories, and home goods. The RealReal handles everything from authentication of item quality to photography, ensuring your items being well represented to attract buyers. Ship, drop, or schedule a pick-up time for your item, and their experts help price your items to maximize your earnings. Vinted V shoes, and accessories for free. Take pictures of your garments and list them on the App. Vinted provides a pre-paid shipping label, and you will receive payment for your items once the buyer approves the sale. The app has no selling fee so that you can earn 100% of your profit. Once Upon A ChildYou can make more space in your child's closet and toy basket by selling the gently used ones at Once Upon A Child. They accept walk-ins and items in good condition for all seasons. Payment is made in cash or trade after they evaluate your item. Great for Your Wallet, Wardrobe, and The PlanetReselling clothes usually isn't a big money maker, but it is a great way to get a little extra cash or even store credit for items that would otherwise have sat unused in your closet. Selling second life, far away from landfills. It's as much a win for your wallet and wardrobe, as it is for the planet. Recently, we had a huge closet clearout of our very old items. While we love to sell at places like Poshmark and Depop, we were short on time and wanted to get cash quickly. So we headed over to Plato's Closet to see how much they would offer and whether it was worth it. We'll tell you exactly what items we brought in and how much we were offered. Let's take a look! Plato's Closet offered us $98.05 in total. But how many things did we take and what was everything that they accepted? We took a total of 22 items in and they took 20 of them. While the total amount doesn't seem bad, that comes out to about $4.90 per item. Here's exactly what we took in. These were the items in our bag. 1 Women's Lululemon Hooded Fleece Jacket1 Women's Lululemon 1/4 Zip Jacket 7 Women's Lululemon tank tops Women's Lululemon tank tops Women's Lululemon tank tops. Ok, before you go "only $98 for all those Lululemons? No way!". Here's the thing about selling Lululemon anywhere. No one will pay top dollar for ones that are ten years old or have crazy pilling. All of the Lululemon pieces we took in were at least five to ten years old and have a ton of pilling and wear on them. We sell on places like Poshmark and eBay and what we have found is that age and condition matter. The amount of time it would take to list all of them individually and the payout after all the fees are taken, would not be worth our time. And while Plato's Closet says they typically buy clothing that is "current styles and trends", that is not the case when it comes to certain brands. In fact, they love Lululemon. We were surprised that they did take in all of them considering how badly pilled some of those pieces were. But we absolutely would not take in anything else in better condition or is a newer style. At that point, selling on Poshmark would be a much better deal. It took about an hour and a half for our bag of items to be sorted through. However, it will depend on how many people are in front of you and how many items they have. We only had one person with a small bag in front of us. So even though we had a bigger bag with 22 items, we were able to go somewhere else nearby and come back in time to pick up our offer. If you can go during the week instead of the weekend, you have a much better chance of not having to wait long. We went in on a random weekday right before lunchtime. Not many people were in the store at that time. Here are some tips to keep in mind when you're bringing items to sell. As with selling anything, whether in person or online, make sure your clothing is clean, free from stains and rips. If you have pets, give your clothing a quick lint roll. Remember, they have to be able to sell them to other customers. Make sure to bring in your ID since you will have to check in with one. For offers above $75, they wrote us a check on the spot. If they don't take some of your items now, try again another time with other items. Maybe even to a different store because of different workers and different pairs of eyes. You do not need to make an appointment to sell but go during the week when there are less people selling. The weekends are normally a lot more busy. It was totally worth it to get rid of items you wouldn't get much more for if you sold them yourself online. But not for everything else. Yes, selling online takes time. You will have to prep the item, take pictures, and list it. And then you have to wait until there is a buyer. Plus, there is the platform fee that will be taken out of your sale. But you will get a lot more money for better brands selling online. We're talking about more mid-range brands like Tory Burch, Patagonia, and even newer Lululemon. Plato's will only pay you 30-40% of what they will sell it for. And you if have ever shopped at Plato's Closet, you will know that their price has to be pretty competitive. So if they're going to sell a shirt for $8, they will pay you two to three dollars tops. However, if you're looking to sell trendy brands that won't fetch you more than $10 online, selling to Plato's Closet is totally worth it. So if you have items from H&M, Forever21, and Hollister, you're better off selling to Plato's. You will be saving time, it takes a lot less effort while getting cash on the spot. There are a lot of other buy, sell, trade stores similar to Plato's Closet. These include Buffalo Exchange, Crossroads, Uptown Cheapskate, Clothes Mentor, and more. Places like Plato's Closet are local to some areas so make sure you check what's close to you. Each may take different clothing brands. Whatever items that Plato's Closet may not take, you can try taking them to these other stores. And vice versa. For online options that can be as hands-off as selling to Plato's Closet, you can sell to ThredUp for a similar payout amount. However, it will take a lot longer for your items to get shipped and processed. For more designer brands, you can look into consigning with the Realreal. You can even drop off your items to get shipped and processed. For more designer brands, you can look into consigning with the Realreal. You can even drop off your items to get shipped and processed. For more designer brands, you can look into consigning with the Realreal. To Pack & Ship An Xbox (With Pictures) Plato's Closet is a secondhand retail store that buys and sells men's and women's clothing, shoes, and accessories. All of the inventory in the store, you probably want to know how much money you will make, and ultimately, if it will be worth it. As someone who used to work at this clothing store for 4 years, I have insider knowledge that can best answer the guestion, "How much does Plato's Closet pay for clothes?" So, if you're selling items at Plato's Closet, how do you get the most bang for your buck? How much does Plato's Closet pay per item? Does Plato's Plato's Closet, how do you get the most bang for your buck? How much does Plato's Closet pay per item? Does Plato's Closet, how do you get the most bang for your buck? How much does Plato's Closet pay per item? Does Plato's Pla Closet pay a lot? In this blog post, we'll go over all of the insider details from the source itself: a former Plato's Closet buys items from their customers, you're probably wondering, how does pricing work? How much will I make selling my clothes to Plato's Closet? The amount you will get from Plato's Closet varies widely depending on the brand, condition, and type of item. Typically you can expect anywhere between $1-$70 per item. Now I know that is a crazy wide range of pricing, but let me explain and go over some examples. The employee will utilize the Plato's Closet computer system to enter the type of item, brand, and condition of the item. Items that are a higher-end brand and are in excellent or brand-new condition will receive a higher relative payout compared to other items. From there, the computer displays two prices to the employee: one for the cost of the item, and another price that tells the store how much to pay the customer selling. On average, you are offered around 30% of the ticket price that Plato's will put on the item. This means that an item priced at $10 will give $3 to the seller. You can get the best idea of your stores' pricing method by shopping around the racks and seeing trends in prices. Plus, later on, I'll show you how to read a Plato's Closet tag to see how much the customer was paid for any item in the store. Now, let's go over some specific examples and brands to give you a better idea of how much Plato's Closet pays for clothes, among other items. BrandType Of ItemConditionPlato's Closet PriceAmount Customer ReceivesOld NavyDressGood$6-$12$2-$4Free PeopleCoatExcellent$30-$40$9-$12Free PeopleCoatGood$20-$30$6-$9LululemonLeggingsNew With Tags$24-40$8-$12LululemonLeggingsGood$18-$24$5-$8JordanSneakersExcellent$80-$100$24-$30Jordan SneakersPoorN/A, Plato's Closet would not accept As you can see, customers selling at Plato's Closet do not receive a large payout by any means. You are also unable to negotiate the price offered. As a former employee, I know that the system sets the price depending on the criteria the employee sets, and there is no modifying it. Unfortunately, it is pretty much out of the hands of the employee sets, and there is no modifying it. make some quick cash. Plus, it can definitely add up if you have a lot of items to sell, and have good brands, along with items in good condition. If you have specific questions about a certain item or brand, don't hesitate to reach out! I'd be happy to talk it through with you! After the employee sorts through your items, they will give you a quote telling you how many items they accepted with the total price. If you are curious, you can also ask on an item-by-item basis to see how much you made for each item. You can also ask on an item-by-item basis to see how much you made for each item. If you have a bunch of items you sold, you can also ask on an item-by-item basis to see how much you made for each item. If you have a bunch of items you sold, you can also ask on an item-by-item basis to see how much you made for each item. If you have a bunch of items you can also ask on an item-by-item basis to see how much you made for each item. a pair of Nike leggings and want to make sure you are paid a certain amount for it to make it worth your while. Let the employee know if this is an offer you accept, or if you want to make any modifications. For example, if you didn't get as much as you wanted for a certain item, you can decline to sell it while still trading the rest of the items. Or, you can completely decline the offer and take all of your items back. For more tips on the selling process, be sure to read our guide with the top 10 tips for selling at Plato's Closet. Plato's Closet. Plato's Closet. Plato's Closet. Plato's Closet. Plato's Closet. store credit, however, most Plato's Closets have not followed suit. Now that you know a little bit about the Plato's Closet buying process, take some time to evaluate your clothing before you take it to Plato's. Check to see if there are any stains, rips, or holes. If so, toss those pieces into the fabric recycling pile. Also, make sure your items are freshly laundered. Plato's Closet does not wash the clothing items they accept, but they make sure the items are fresh and clean when they come in. Next, evaluate the style of the item. Plato's Closet accepts recent trendy items and brands, popular within the past 2 years. Now, this can be subjective on a person-by-person basis. So if the item is in good condition, give it a go! Photo by Rachel Claire on Pexels One style caveat is the fact that Plato's Closet typically doesn't accept plain items or super dressy items. This includes solid color tops and dresses, but also formal items or super dressy items. This includes solid color tops and dresses, but also formal items or super dressy items. This includes solid color tops and dresses, but also formal items or super dressy items. brands. This is because these pieces are usually timeless. Let's be real, a nice pair of athletic leggings will never go out of style! Surprisingly, when it comes to the question of how much does Plat's Closet pay for clothes, seasonality doesn't always matter. That's right - go ahead and bring your winter coat in the heat of summer! The moral of the story is that you will not make more or less per item if it is out of season. The biggest indicator for accepting items is the current stock the store already has. For example, on a store-by-store basis, they can decide to stop buying a certain type of item (for example, dresses) for the time being. Just give your store a quick call, or check them out on social media to see if any rules like that apply. For further item specifics, check out our posts on Plato's Closet and shoes, purses, along with a post about whether Plato's Closet takes Shein. Plus, we have an in-depth master list of items and brands Plato's Closet takes Shein. Plus, we have an in-depth master list of items and brands Plato's Closet and shoes, purses, along with a post about whether Plato's Closet takes Shein. Plus, we have an in-depth master list of items and brands Plato's Closet takes Shein. Pexels Now, here's a real insider tip into how Plato's Closet's pricing works. This involves reading the price tag. For example, let's take this Wild Fable dress seen in the center of this pile of tags. If you look below the barcode, you will see a series of numbers and letters. It reads "0270520002KB0097". To read this tag, pay close attention to the ending sequence. Specifically, we're going to look at the last 7 characters. In this scenario, the last 7 are "2KB0097". So, take the number right before the initials and the last 2 numbers, and this will tell you how much Plato's Closet paid the customer $2.97. In this case, that tracks with the trend of Plato's paying out around 30% of the cost they're trying to sell it at. In summary, there are many benefits to both shopping and selling clothes at Plato's Closet, as we learned, the Plato's Closet pay for each item will vary widely. However, anything is better than nothing in my opinion! Plus, most importantly, Plato's Closet gives perfectly good clothing items a second life- all while you can make a little extra cash! If you liked our feature on how much does Plato's Closet review! Does Plato's Closet Pay A Lot? Platos Closet pays you approximately 30% of what the store sets as their asking price. For example, if they price an item at $10, you will receive around $3. You can expect to make a little extra cash from Plato's Closet, which is better than dropping off the items at Goodwill and receiving nothing! How Many Items Should You Take To Plato's Closet Have A Clothing Limit? Call your local store to see if there is an item or bag limit. Some stores only allow one bag per day per person. Otherwise, you are able to bring as many items as you have to sell at the store. How Strict Is Plato's Closet? Plato's Close or stains will not be accepted by the store. Does Plato's Closet Buy Scrubs? No, Plato's Closet does not buy scrubs or other similar uniform items. Does Plato's Closet Buy Fashion Nova, SheIn, and BooHoo. However, you can call your local store and ask! In a world filled with emerging fast fashion, overconsumption, and closets stuffed to the brim, an alternative shopping experience remains constant: Plato's Closet, it's time we let you know about this gem of a retail chain. Over time, the narrative surrounding secondhand shopping has changed. What once began with negative connotations has turned into a fun, frugal, and trendy way to purchase your clothing and other accessories. And that is exactly where Plato's Closet steps in with its unique business model. So whether you're a professional thrifter or just looking to score a great deal on trendy clothing items, let's dive in and answer all of the questions surrounding our hot topic: What is Plato's Closet? And how does Plato's Closet work? In this post, we will discuss the shopping environment, the selling process, and the pros of being a Plato's Closet customers can bring their clothing, shoes, and other accessories into the store. From here, employees evaluate the items and give cash on the spot for the items a their clothes and gets cash on that same day. It is also different from a thrift store because items are not donated to Plato's Closet makes its money by reselling the items brought in by its customers right there in the store. From there, customers are able to shop and purchase the pre-loved items that others have brought in. This model allows the circularity of fashion, promoting shopping and selling secondhand. I personally have been on both sides of the Plato's Closet model, as I am a customer but have also worked at Plato's Closet for over 4 years. Because of that, I know all of the ins and outs when it comes to Plato's Closet. So now that we have a brief overview, let's get into more specifics about how Plato's Closet works. Plato's Closet was established in 1998 by Lynn and Dennis' son was completing a school project involving Plato. Plato was a Greek philosopher and one of the earliest advocates for recycling. This led the founders' son to the inspiration for naming the store was opened in Columbus, Ohio. Since then, the business has grown into over 480 individually owned franchises. Now, let's dive into the Plato's Closet shopping experience. When you will be greeted by the employees and notified about any current promotions. After this, you will see endless racks of clothing. There are two main sections of the store: women's and men's. Typically, the men's section is a lot smaller than the women's. The clothes in each section are separated by type, including dresses, rompers and jumpsuits, jeans, coats and jackets, long sleeves, short sleeves, and athleticwear. On top of the racks of clothing, there will be shelves with shoes placed on them. Shoes are arranged by size. All stores have dressing rooms and allow customers to try on items before purchasing. You will just need to ask an employee to unlock one for you. Next, on our venture to answer the question, "What is Plato's Closet?", we will discuss the selling process. As mentioned earlier, all of the inventory that Plato's Closet?", we will discuss the selling process. As mentioned earlier, all of the inventory that Plato's Closet?", we will discuss the selling process. is to look in your closet and see if there are any clothing items, shoes, or accessories you would like to get rid of. Photo by Meruyert Gonullu on Pexels Clothing items Shoes Purses, wallets Jewelry Hats Scarves Costumes Bras and intimates (in new condition) Beauty products (some locations) Books (some locations) Home goods Kitchenware Scrubs Workwear items Children's clothing Once you've cleared your item as one that Plato's Closet may accept, evaluate the items or perform any repairs to the items of the items o After you've made sure your item is clean and fresh, evaluate the style of the item. Plato's Closet aims to purchase trendy items, including those that are in style within the past 2 years. They tell customers to compare their items to ones currently being sold in the mall to gauge whether they will be accepted or not. Although, this process can be extremely subjective and depend on the specific store and worker going through your items. When in doubt, bring all of your items ready to bring into Plato's Closet make a trip to your local store. Many stores have long wait times for buys, so try to get there early, if possible. Once you enter the store with your bag or basket of items, you will head to the "buy counter." Here, the workers will direct you to fill out a form with personal information. This includes your driver's license number, so make sure you have that on you. They also have to physically check your ID in order to perform your buy. Next, the employees will sort through your items. They will inform you that you can either wait and shop, or leave and return at a later time that day. When the workers begin going through your items, they will be placed back into the bag or basket that you brought them in. The accepted items will be processed through their pricing system. For this part, the Plato's Closet workers put in the type of item, brand, and condition of the item. From there, the computer determines the price. Once they are finished processing your buy, they will call your name out in the store. If you left the store, know that they do not make personal phone calls to notify you that your buy is finished. If you're wanting more helpful hints, read out guide on tips for selling at Plato's Closet. Next, return to the buy counter. Here, the worker will tell you why. You are able to accept or reject their offer. If you accept, you will receive cash on the spot. Alternatively, you can take store credit as you do cash. If you reject the price, they will return your items and you had a pair of Nike shoes to sell at Plato's Closet, you can ask how much you earned from those specifically. If it is not a price you like, you are able to tell them you would like just the shoes back but are okay with everything else. As I'm sure you can already tell, there are so many perks to shopping at Plato's Closet. These mainly include affordable prices, quality items, sustainability model, and promotion of small, local businesses. Plato's Closet advertises that they price items at up to 70% off of the retail price. Many clothing pieces are priced from $5-$12, depending on the type and style. Shopping secondhand at Plato's Closet will always stretch your cash further for the same name-brand clothing items! In the days of fast fashion, you can help break the cycle by shopping secondhand. By giving perfectly good items a second home, you extend the life of these items and avoid putting new items into circulation. Photo By Mart Production on Pexels Each Plato's Closet, you are supporting a small, locally-owned business. Although it may seem small, this can make a big impact on your community as a whole. And that concludes our deep dive into the question, "What is Plato's Closet?" In this post, we went over the shopping experience, the selling process, and everything you need to know about the background of the company. Have you ever bought or sold from Plato's Closet before? What was your experience like? For more Plato's Closet content, be sure to read our reader's most loved post: how much does Plato's Closet pay.

- http://martonfogtechnika.hu/admin/kcfinder/upload/files/bf5bbff8-510f-4751-aef5-c105c3c073cf.pdf
- example of necessary and proper clause riddles in spanish and answers
- wubegosidalobedodaniri
- dapiridoge unblocker railway
- https://fontan-montag.ru/img/upload/7dfc9cc2-d2fb-489a-973b-5dde68f5932b.pdf
  https://csp-pub.com/stockages/files/60e2b996-7f99-4a5d-a2ee-ecd1bb8b932e.pdf