There was no comment on the outage by the Pakistan Communications Authority or government officials have not responded to repeated queries. The Association of Internet Providers said it received a notice from the regulator late last week saying that the weekend would be used by the political parties in Pakistan to organised protests against what it said were rigged Feb 7 parliamentary elections. In the run-up to the Feb 7 election, the country's leading news outlet, Dawn, had been criticised for allegedly favouring opposition leader Imran Khan. Some media platforms are often used by protest organisers to call followers out to the streets and spread the word about planned demonstrations.Pakistan has witnessed an increase in political instability since the balloting. The backers of the overseas oversight body denies charges by Khans party that the vote was stolen. The Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf group or TPI said on Thursday that the restrictions on X have been placed by the authorities to suppress its voice on social media. On Wednesday, U.S. State Department spokesman Matthew Miller expressed concerns in a statement to reporters over the outage and restrictions on the freedom of expression and association in Pakistan. We continue to call on Pakistan to respect freedom of expression and restore access to a social media that has been restricted including Twitter, now known as X, Miller said. We have and will continue to emphasize the importance of respecting these fundamental freedoms during our engagements with Pakistani officials. Khans rivals, including the former Premier Shehbaz Sharif, are trying to form a coalition government. Sharif replaced Khan after his ouster in a no-confidence vote in parliament in 2022. Khan has since then been convicted of offenses in what his supporters call politically motivated moves to keep him out of office.
