Then he lost a record deal and couldnt find any songwriting contract. Randall found himself frequently drinking whiskey that his manager told him: Hey man, every now and then, youve got to put a bottle to your head and pull the trigger. The line stuck on Randall, and he decided to use it in a song. When Paisley found out about the song, he immediately wanted to record it with either Krauss or Dolly Parton. The other parts of the song came into fruition when Powers and Haggard were in Nashville at the Opryland Hotel. During that time, Haggard had been writing songs about his recent divorce from fellow country singer Leona Williams.
