THE Los Angeles Chargers have unveiled their stunning $270 million new HQ – which includes a unique helmet-shaped pizza oven.Known as the 'Bolt', the state-of-the-art NFL facility encompasses 150,000 square feet and includes three full-sized grass practice fields.7The Los Angeles Chargers have unveiled their new $270m training facilityCredit: Mike Nowak/Los Angeles Chargers7The atrium is highlighted by a massive Samsung screenCredit: Mike Nowak/Los Angeles ChargersThe 'Bolt' has three full-sized grass fieldsCredit: Mike Nowak/Los Angeles ChargersThe new building comes with the arrival of new general manager Joe Hoeritz and head coach Jim Harbaugh in the offseason.It has been more than three years in development.Located in El Segundo, California, the entrance features the Chargers' version of the Hollywood Walk of Fame.Each member of the team's Hall of Fame is honored with their own terrazzo tile and brass inlay.It was designed by the same company that installs displays on the Hollywood Walk of Fame."It's a small way to say 'thank you' to the greats that played for our team over the last 60-plus years," Chargers owner Dean Spanos said. "It's the first thing you see when you come into this building which really, to me, says that this is the foundation of our team."The giant atrium at the entrance is highlighted by a three-story Samsung ISC Indoor LED video wall.Meanwhile, the ground floor includes an expansive locker room, equipment room, training & medical space, weight room, hydrotherapy room, recovery room, sauna, and steam room.The locker room is almost double the size of the team's old space.Jim Harbaugh has been living in an RV since swapping Michigan for LA Chargers and claims 'I've always wanted to do it'There is also a barber's area, multiple player lounges, a lap/rehab pool and an outdoor lounge featuring a BBQ, firepit and full sun outdoor televisions.The second floor is home to an expansive team dining room and kitchen that has been created in partnership with Wolfgang Puck Catering.It notably features a pizza oven designed to look like a Chargers helmet.In addition, there is a carvery, smoothie and coffee bars, pasta station, Grill station, stand-alone island salad bar and rotating daily Global fare station.The new dining space comes with the Chargers being ranked 31st out of the 32 NFL teams for food/cafe/eteria in an NFLPA Survey.The Chargers also received low ranks in multiple categories including training room (30th), weight room (29th) and locker room (27th).7The cafeteria has a helmet-shaped pizza ovenCredit: Ty Nowell/Los Angeles Chargers7The facility has plenty of places for players to relaxCredit: Mike Nowak/Los Angeles Chargers7A view of the team auditoriumCredit: Mike Nowak/Los Angeles Chargers'Well, I paid a lot of attention to it," Chargers chief of staff Fred Maas told ESPN about the survey."We also knew that we were constrained by the building that we were stuck with and the circumstances we were stuck with. "And we always wanted to build a world-class facility irrespective of what the ratings were. "Frankly, I was surprised we did as well as we did. We were 31st of the 32 teams. "So it's not surprising given the circumstances."The top floor features a soon-to-be-completed private, members-only club with wrap-around outdoor view balcony, lounge, dining area and private dining room. 7It also serves as the hub for all executive and business staff offices."I haven't been this excited in a long time," Spanos added."This took a lot of time and a lot of hard work, and I just feel fortunate that our staff, players and fans will be able to enjoy this for years to come."The Bolt will open its doors to the public on July 13-14. The Chargers expect the facility will be used for the 2026 Fifa World Cup, 2027 Super Bowl and 2028 Los Angeles Olympics. He called the journey "incredible" and "a crescendo," with the Chargers' move into their new facility now at the finish line.The march to El Segundo, however, cannot be described using anything close to the word "swift." "I was talking to some of the players," Fred Maas said, "and I realized that when I started this, Joe Alt was 13."Alt today is the Chargers' starting right tackle, the rookie entering the NFL in April as the No. 5 overall pick in the draft. The eastern border of the Chargers practice fields is overlooked by an L.A. Metro track. Maas, the team's chief of staff, began the extensive search for a new home about the time the Chargers announced their relocation from San Diego in early 2017.They eventually settled on 14 acres miles from LAX, broke ground in May of 2022 and officially opened last month after seven seasons at a temporary headquarters in Costa Mesa. "In terms of arrival moments in L.A., I think it was a huge step when we moved from Dignity (Health Sports Park) to SoFi (Stadium, in 2020)," Maas said. "This feels like the icing on the cake."The next stage comes when Chargers rookies report for training camp Tuesday, followed by the quarterbacks. The full team is set to open practice July 24 on the facility's three natural-grass fields.While there might be a sense of completion, the Chargers' move remains very much in motion as new issues — missing electrical outlets, improperly matched TV brackets, failing refrigeration units — pop up daily. The press conference room features large monitors and room for various types of functions. "Generally speaking, 80% of the problems come in the last 5% of a project," said Maas, a veteran in the development business. "It sort of feels like that now. It's an impressive building. We've accomplished a lot. But all I see are problems."The building is striking with its "Chargers Walk of Fame" leading to the front door, its three-story video screen in the lobby and its angled roofline designed as a nod to the team's lightning-bolt identity.In fact, much of the place is cut at pronounced angles — from the sidewalks outside to the staircase inside to the landscaping all about — as the Chargers embraced their branding. "We sat down and said, 'Let's create something that's really an icon for who we are,'" Maas said. "All of that is part of the DNA of what we wanted in having the building reflect the franchise."The "Walk of Fame" includes the 43 members of the Chargers' hall of fame and was fashioned to resemble the star-lined sidewalks of Hollywood. To do the work, the team hired Top End Terrazzo, the company that created the world's most famous walk of fame about 15 miles to the north. Notable Chargers, including Dan Fouts, are immortalized in Hollywood Walk of Fame style outside the facility. So names from the past like Lance Alworth, Dan Fouts and Kellen Winslow literally pave the way to the Chargers' present, where the new building's most weighty feature soon will greet visitors just inside the main entrance.A desk is being sculpted in Santa Ana from a 48,000-pound blue-and-white — Chargers colors — rock that came from Brazil. The stone was so large that it had to be chopped into four sections before being transported.The first floor includes an expansive locker room that can accommodate 104 players, plus numerous player lounges and an indoor/outdoor weight room that covers 11,000 square feet. There's an outdoor lap/rehabilitation pool not far from where athletic trainers will work with players managing injuries and new executive director of player development Ben Herbert will attempt to keep players from getting hurt in the first place. The auditorium in the Chargers' new facility features seating for 173 and is lined with theatrical-quality acoustic panels. The building's most impressive space might be one floor up — a two-story auditorium that will serve as the full-team meeting room. It's equipped with seating for 173 and lined with theatrical-quality acoustic panels.Maas described the auditorium as "Carnegie Hall meets the Chargers," adding that the room will be available in the offseason as an event venue for functions outside the team.The second floor is where the cafeteria and all the position-group rooms can be found along with an outside turf area for smaller walk-through teaching sessions.The cafeteria will be run by Wolfgang Puck Catering — "I think it will be the rival of any business in L.A.," Maas said — and features a pizza oven covered in mosaic tiles that looks like a Chargers helmet. The locker room in the Chargers' new facility can accommodate 104 players. "The best statement of confirmation has been the players, who've come through and said, 'Thank you for delivering all this to us,'" Maas said. "I'd never heard that before. That's been encouraging."Much of the third floor is occupied by a private, membership-only indoor/outdoor club that will be available to corporate partners and fans seeking a more premium experience.From the club's wrap-around balcony, downtown Los Angeles, SoFi Stadium and — on clearer days — the Hollywood sign are all visible. The view is a significant upgrade for a team that spent seven years looking at the back of the Costa Mesa Ikea.The Chargers are calling their new home "The Bolt," a name coined by Jason Lavine, the team's senior vice president of brand creative and content. Maas explained that the highly touted headquarters of the Dallas Cowboys offered some inspiration. Much of the Chargers' new facility is cut at pronounced angles — from the sidewalks outside to the staircase inside to the landscaping all about. "Did 'The Star' have some influence on it?" he said. "Absolutely. But it's really who we are. It embodies the organization, the brand. It just made sense. I think we all embraced it."For a team that used to practice in the parking lot of Qualcomm Stadium, the Chargers have entered a new era, a 150,000-square-foot exclamation point to the momentum generated this offseason. The Chargers' new home is being called 'the Bolt,' a naming convention partly inspired by the Cowboys' facility known as "the Star." Since the arrival of Jim Harbaugh in January, this is a franchise that has been on the rebound, any questions about the Chargers' long-term future in Los Angeles going silent."Now, it's going to switch to how we perform on the field," Maas said. "I got to tell you, I've never felt what we're experiencing now with Coach Harbaugh and the stuff he's doing. If we were a stock, I'd put an up arrow next to us." Advertising Advertising The dazzling 150,000 square-foot headquarters features three perfectly manuevred practice fields along with a trio of training tubs, an outdoor lap pool, a player lounge and a separate coaches lounge. The locker room features 103 lockers and the building itself is enhanced with 250-plus TVs. Chargers Head Coach Jim Harbaugh gushed about The Bolt when the Chargers opened training camp. "Just amazing. Everybody's first impression is just it's incredible, amazing," Harbaugh said. "Things are going to jump out at you. How beautiful it is aesthetically. The grass is as good as any grass anywhere, three fields of it. "But then inside, I mean it's all football," Harbaugh added. "This was designed by football people who knew exactly what they were doing." The Bolt also features a three-story LED board that is 42 feet tall and greets staff and visitors in the lobby upon arrival, as well as a two-story auditorium that serves as the team meeting room. Dive deeper into the building and you'll see it is designed to give players an edge in order to be at their best on practice and game days. The new 7,000 square-foot weight room features top-line equipment such as half racks, chest-supported rows, adjustable benches, performance towers, pull down machines and force frames. Ben Herbert, the Chargers Executive Director of Player Performance, has only been with the Bolts since January. But he raved about the excitement and potential of the weight room, which has been tailored to the vision he's implemented in recent months. Herbert laid out the open space in the middle of the weight room so that players can be active with their movements. "What I didn't want to do was create clutter," Herbert said. "I wanted to make sure what we have in here is what we need but I wanted the space to feel open. "I didn't want to put anything in here that didn't need to be in here because we have outdoor space we can utilize as well," Herbert added. Oh yes, the weight room will also feature sliding garage doors that open up and give the Chargers an additional 3,000 square feet of outdoor workspace. "Everything we have the capability for inside, we'll have outside as well," Herbert said. "If you want to train outside, you'll be able to." The Bolt is located in El Segundo, which is about a 15-minute drive from Inglewood, where SoFi Stadium is. The three-level Bolt facility is a massive 150,000 square feet headquarters and features three grass practice fields. Upon the opening of the new facilities, the Chargers shared several images of the beautifully renovated new headquarters for the Chargers, showcasing the team's new cafeteria, weight room, team meeting room, coaches lounge, locker room, equipment room, recovery center, and press conference room. These spaces appear to be a huge upgrade for the Chargers as an organization and for the players. The quality of the previous Chargers facilities was a significant reason the Chargers ranked 30th out of 32 in the 2024 NFL PA report cards. The locker room, food/cafe/eteria, training room, locker room, and weight room all received either a D+ or F in the latest report cards. Space was a major factor in these grades as many players felt there was not enough room for all of them in the hot/cold tubs, in the weight room, the locker room, and the cafeteria. With these upgraded spaces in the Bolt, those report card grades should improve for the Chargers in 2025. The new photos show lots of areas to sit both inside and outside at the cafeteria and spacious rooms across the rest of the facility. The opening of the facility comes five days before Chargers rookies report to training camp on July 16, and 12 days before the veterans report to camp.
