Bitcoin's spot demand has been contracting over the past week, signaling a waning of retail interest, according to data from CryptoQuant.

"BTC's appeal as a safe haven is not only becoming more visible but also more deeply rooted—growing at the same time that confidence in traditional institutions continues to erode," FRNT Financial Head of Data and Analytics Strah Savinja told Decrypt.

"Fast forward a few years: Corporate chains will end up with the complex tech but without the added value for users, which is no central entity to control them. At that point, these chains will lose the focus from corporates."

Crypto markets and stocks have in the past done well in a low interest rate environment. Experts previously told Decrypt that the price of BTC would benefit if lower interest rates.

Miners typically rely on the price of Bitcoin to go up to cover costs but continued volatility for the asset has spurred, some large miners to branch into high-powered computing.

Catching a coin's name trending on X or in a Telegram chat isn't enough to justify putting capital at risk. Social buzz moves fast, and most spikes fade before price action catches up, or worse, they might be the result of coordinated shilling. That's why the next step is to turn raw noise into structured signals you can actually rank and compare.
